Amusement Notes.
The play to be given by the Bennett-Moulton Co. at its opening performance next Thursday night at the opera house is one entitled "A Daughter of the People." It is a story of European life and the plot lays around a young girl, whose father, a Russian exile, and gambler, has borrowed a large sum of money, with which to gamble, and has given a mortgage note as security for same, plunging his daughter as security for payment, which is permissible under an old law in Russia. The old man, ruined, commits suicide, and the creditors "Jean Roux" and "Norman Ware" get into the story here. The "Daughter of the People" is a story of "Rouge" sympathies. He buys the note, and takes the girl under his protection. On the way to England, where he intends placing her under his mother's protection, the girl is abducted by "Jean Roux" and "Norman Ware" and taken to Russia. Incidentally, it develops that "Rouge" is an address to a large estate, which "Rouge" means to get through a forced marriage with her. She is rescued by "Ware," and his dunn "Bob Emerson," after a series of rather exciting adventures, and situations.

THE BEDSIDE MANNER.
Should Doctors Always Tell the Whole Truth?

What is the manner that is most effective for doctors to assume at the bedside asks a writer in the British Medical Journal. No general rule can be laid down, for the manner must be adapted to the patient. One thing, however, may be said. You may be rude like Abernethy, genial like Sir Astley Cooper, courtly like Sir Henry Hallford, but like St. Paul, unless you have charity—that is to say, practical sympathy—you are failing.

"There is nothing the patient resents so much as apparent indifference, or what he calls want of attention, on the part of the doctor. We have known an ill-timed peculiarity to shake a laboriously built-up edifice of faith to its foundations."

"On the other hand, a gloomy manner has a disastrous effect on a nervous patient. A famous physician of the past used to relate how, when taken to his first important case by a professional patron, he tried to adapt himself to the situation by assuming an aspect befitting the solemnity of the case, and to that effect he observed, 'I am sorry to say, Sir, that your patient is very ill, and I am afraid that he will not survive the night.'"

"Of one fashionable physician it is related that when he paid his usual call on a patient one day he was informed, with her ladyship's apologies, that she was too ill to see him that day."

"How much should be said to a patient must depend on circumstances, but the doctor should in all cases tell the truth and nothing but the truth. He need not, however, always tell the whole truth. For two excellent reasons it might not be for the patient's good if he did, and again, he may not be sure about it himself, and he has no right to disturb the mind of one who looks to him for comfort by suspicions which may be unfounded."—British Medical Journal.

INDIAN RUNNER DUCKS.

Good Profit in the Big Fowls, if Properly Cared For.

The Indian Runner ducks came originally from the West Indies, where they have been bred for years as egg producers. They were introduced into the United States about 12 years ago from England and have won for themselves a high position in eastern markets. In color they are fawn and white. Their peculiar markings and racy appearance make them very attractive, and to see them is to admire them. But what is best of all is their egg-producing qualities, surpassing anything yet produced, says the Indiana Farmer. Nearly every duck lays an egg nearly every day, the year around, except during moult, if given the proper food and attention. By attention we mean the every-day kind, not the haphazard way. What is worth doing at all is worth doing well. The standard weight for a duck is four pounds, drake 4½ pounds. The flesh is very juicy and well flavored. They mature rapidly, reaching market size in nine or ten weeks.

Running water is not at all necessary for their development, but they require plenty of clean, fresh water for drinking purposes. They are great foragers and find a part of their food, when given free range, but they can be successfully handled in limited quarters, a two-foot fence being sufficient to inclose them. There are many points in favor of duck culture, as they are free from lice, roup, scabby legs and other diseases so common to chickens. Everyone knows something of the immensity of the poultry business, but not many realize the possibilities of ducks, and especially the breeding of Indian Runner ducks. It is surprising to know the number of ducklings that may be raised on a small piece of ground. They can be raised with less loss than chickens and kept in larger flocks. Someone has said that when hatched they are half raised, unless an accident befalls them. They are easy keepers, and we find a great deal of pleasure in caring for them.

If winter eggs are wanted, laying ducks should have an inclosed house, but after May 1 they do better if allowed to run out all the time, but should be penned at night until 9 o'clock the next morning, when they will be through laying for the day. Laying ducks should be fed a mash morning and noon, consisting of bran, shorts, corn meal and beef scraps, with whole corn at night. Supply plenty of grit and oyster shells. Never feed quite all they will eat. Keep one drake for every six or eight ducks and fatten the rest for market when 9 or 10 weeks old.

LAND MEASURING DEVICE.

If Well Made It Will Be Found Very Useful on the Farm.

To measure fields readily the handy device shown herewith will be found very useful. It consists of a heavy wire or light iron rod sixteen and a half feet long, bent into a circle and the ends welded together.

Across the circle at right angles to each other are two pieces of light wood five and a half feet long. Through the center of these a hole is bored and a double handle slightly longer than half the diameter is attached as shown by means of a bolt and nutted outside the rim of the circle. All that is necessary then is to mark one of the crosspieces and start measuring with this point on the ground.

The number of revolutions multiplied by sixteen and one-half will give the distance in rods across the field. Each quarter revolution, therefore, measures a quarter of a rod.

It is necessary in keeping this measure straight and true to use iron. It is therefore advisable to use iron heavy enough to stand ordinary knocks.—Orange Judd Farmer.

LESS SWARMING, MORE BEES.
Experience of Expert Apiarist in Making Increase of Colonies.

Speaking of the swarming period of bees, Secretary Smith of the Connecticut Bee Keepers' association recently had the following to say:

"Swarming is frequently so annoying to comb honey producers that a recent experience of mine may be helpful. On May 17 I found five or six capped queen cells in my best colony, and, desiring to prevent swarming and make a moderate increase of colonies, I removed five frames of brood, shaking all the bees back into the hive."

"The empty space was filled with frames of comb. All queen cells except one were destroyed. The five frames of brood, with the largest ripe queen cell and five frames of foundation, were placed in a new hive. Another strong colony was moved to a new stand and the new hive put in its place. The removed colony gave up a sufficient number of its bees to take care of the brood in the new hive, and by June 1 the latter contained a mated queen and a good number of young bees. The queen is a beauty and may have been nursed under the supered impulse in the first place;
